Proto-Afrasian names of ungulates in light of the Proto-Afrasian homeland issue¹

In this paper, we present the first section of a comprehensive thesaurus of Proto-Afrasian zoonyms, compiled and reconstructed by the authors. The list contains more than a hundred names of ungulates, including bovids, pigs, equids and camels, as well as large herbivores (elephants, hippopotamuses and rhinoceroses), allowing for a wholesome (at the current level of our knowledge) picture of these species of fauna in the period preceding the split of Proto-Afrasian (ca. 11th millennium BCE, according to glottochronology) within the area presumably inhabited by speakers of Proto-Afrasian. The results of the reconstruction may be interpreted in favor of two different points of view on the localization of the Proto-Afrasian homeland, namely, the Levant vs. East Africa; the paper presents arguments both in favor of and against each of these hypotheses.

Keywords: Proto-Afrasian homeland; Afrasian (Afro-Asiatic) languages; etymology of zoonyms; reconstruction of cultural lexicon.

Until recently, debates about the primary habitat of the speakers of Proto-Afrasian (Afroasiatic, Semito-Hamitic) have been based either upon general and extra-linguistic argumentation, sometimes accompanied with scarce, incomplete and unrepresentative lexical comparisons; or upon the reconstruction of Proto-Afrasian (PAA) terms interpreted as arguments in favor of intensive gathering of wild cereals and beans (Diakonoff 1981) or in favor of proto- or incipient agriculture (Militarev 2002).

It goes without saying that the Urheimat issue cannot be seriously discussed without a complete and detailed reconstruction of PAA animal and plant names, as well as general environmental and cultural vocabularies. Likewise, of vital importance here are the approximate dates of branching of PAA and its descendant proto-languages, obtained by glottochronology. A trustworthy solution of the problem can be achieved only through correlation of comparative linguistic data with the findings and outcomes of such related sciences as archaeology, paleoclimatology, paleontology, and human population genetics.

The genealogical classification of the Afrasian macrofamily as worked out by Alexander Militarev, based first and foremost on lexicostatistics, is as follows (the figures below refer to the approximate BCE dates of branching of proto-languages, obtained glottochronologically by applying Sergei Starostin's recalibrated method²):

Militarev's research is supported by The Russian Science Foundation (Project № 20-18-00159); the financing organization is The Institute of Linguistics, Russian Academy of Sciences.

² As described in, e.g., Starostin 2000.

Proto-Afrasian – ca. 10,500:

1. Proto-Semitic-Egyptian-Berber-Chadic (PSEBC) – ca. 9,000.
 - 1.1. Proto-Semitic – ca. 4,500.
 - 1.1.1. Proto-South Semitic (Proto-MSA).
 - 1.1.2. Proto-North Semitic – ca. 3,700.
 - 1.1.2.1. Akkadian.
 - 1.1.2.2. Proto-Central Semitic (Ethiopian-Arabic-Levantine) – ca. 3,000.
 - 1.2. Proto-Egyptian-Berber-Chadic – ca. 7,800.
 - 1.2.1. Egyptian.
 - 1.2.2. Proto-Berber-Chadic – ca. 6,500.
 - 1.2.2.1. Proto-Berber – ca. 1,000.
 - 1.2.2.2. Proto-Chadic – ca. 5,500.

2. Proto-Cushitic-Omotic (PCO) – ca. 8,800.

- 2.1. Proto-Cushitic – ca. 7,500.
 - 2.1.1. Proto-North-Central Cushitic – ca. 6,800.
 - 2.1.1.2. Proto-North Cushitic (Beja).
 - 2.1.1.3. Proto-Central Cushitic (Agaw) – ca. 2,000.
 - 2.1.2. Proto-East Cushitic (incl. Yaaku-Mogogodo) – ca. 6,000.
 - 2.1.3. Proto-South Cushitic (incl. Dahalo and Ma'a) – ca. 4,800.
- 2.2. Proto-Omotic – ca. 6,000.
 - 2.2.1. Proto-North Omotic (incl. Dizi and Mao) – ca. 4,200.
 - 2.2.2. Proto-South Omotic (incl. Ongota) – ca. 4,600.

Until now, any systematic paleozoological argumentation relying on a complete set of PAA animal names has been conspicuously lacking. Today, however, over a hundred names for animals reconstructed by Militarev (who has also drawn from the most reliable comparanda and reconstructions by Olga Stolbova, Aharon Dolgopolsky, Václav Blažek and Gábor Takács, as well as, naturally, those included in SED II) represent terms that can be labeled Proto-Afrasian and refer to species which may be relevant for addressing the problem of the PAA habitat from the point of view of both biocenosis and food acquisition (hunting, fishing, and domestication of animals).

The animal section which is by far the largest (some fifty items), the most economically vital for the Epipaleolithic man of Southwest Asian and North African areas, and one of the most essential for dealing with the issue of the original homeland, consists of PAA names of ungulates (bovids, camels, equids), conventionally labeled as “largest herbivores”.

Below we present the complete list³ of reconstructed forms⁴ on various levels, together with their reflexes in individual languages.

1. Bovids and pigs

1.1a. *?ar(a)w/y-‘k. of larger bovid’

³ Regrettably, we did not have time to include data from the forthcoming Issue VI (Labials) of the Chadic Lexical Database by Olga Stolbova.

Sem. *?i/arw-/?awr-* ‘calf, bull’: Akk. (OAKK. on) arwû, armû, etc. ‘gazelle’ [Gazella sp.]⁵ || Syr. ?arw-ān-ā ‘vitulus, vitula’ | Gur. *?ar- ‘cows’: Ez., Gt. äray, etc.⁶

⁹ Omot. N.: Koyra aar-e ‘flock of sheep’, Male war-i ‘goat’ are isolated terms, likely lws. from E. Cush.

Berb. ti-halay* (< *-?ayal, met.?) ‘sheep’: Nefusa t-ili | Zenaga t-iži | Ahaggar té-helé, Ghat či-hali, Ayr t-ele, E. Wlm. te-hole, etc.¹¹

Omot. N. *miHi(n)z- ‘cow, bull’: Wolaita mízz-a, Gofa miz-a, minž-o, Zala mizz-ā ‘cow’, míz-a ‘livestock, cattle’, Dorze miiz, Koyra miz-a ‘ox’, Chara miy-ā, Yemsa miy-ā, miž-à ‘cow’, Kafa minž-o ‘cattle’, Bworo mii(n)z-à ‘cow, cattle’, Dizi (Sheko) mínž-o or mínz-a.¹⁸

▲ Looks like a unique case of derivation with the prefix m- from i(n)ž-* ‘k. of smaller bovid’ (1.4a.) as early as the PAA level. With all the problems in each of the proposed roots and/or their relationship, a rather rare combination of the radicals ʃ* and ʒ* makes chance coincidence unlikely.

¹⁹ Cf. also Akk. būlu ‘herd of cattle, sheep or horses; wild animals (gen.)’ (unless from Sem. bawl-* ‘mind, spirit, living creatures’).

²⁰ Infantile words: acc. to EDE II 24, “therefore cannot be considered” which is a debatable statement.

²⁹ Otherwise < *čaʔVw-.

³⁰ Jud. šētā ‘ewe’, šē ‘lamb’ and Sam. šh ‘sheep’ are most likely Hebraisms.

³¹ Cf. also šy ‘pig, sow’, if ? is not < r or l.

³² Perhaps *ša?- in view of such forms as šáa.

³⁴ Omotic reflexes of AA sibilants/sibilant affricates are not quite clear yet.

³⁷ s can continue AA *s- and *č, while Oromo f- in foon-i, if it belongs here, points to *č.

(Bura-Margi group) terms like *č*VwVr-* ‘elephant’ [Loxodonta africana] are usually considered by Chadicists to be < *č*VwVn-*; in Stolbova 2011 #433, the suggested reconstruction *ž/č*VwVn-* is compared with HEC *žana?Vy-; more likely these are two different roots since, acc. to CED: 28–29, reflexes of *č and *ž do not overlap, while forms like Bana č*iwò* are either to be treated as a separate entry (see 1.10a) or point to a deleted *-r rather than *-n in word-final position; acc. to CED 35, the former is generally less stable than the latter. At the same time, in CED: 44, *-n > -r is postulated for C. Chad. groups 2, 3, 5 and 7, but not for group 4 including Nzangi-Kobochi in which, therefore, -r < *-r is regular which makes the whole idea of *č*VwVr-* < *č*VwVn-* less likely. Cf. also C.: Khamir siriyā ‘Antilopensorte’ < *č*ir-*?

⁴¹ But Burunge cawadu and Asa šodo id. probably point to *cawad- rather than *čawar-.

⁶⁵ Cf. Chad. IVw(h)-* ‘wild animal(s), meat’ (CED #549), likely related.

⁶⁶ Note non-etymological -h- in MSA.

⁶⁷ Cf. also alu ‘bull’, quoted in EDE I 86 as “Tamasheq”, dialect name and source not specified.

⁶⁸ Usually regarded as derived from the verbal root mr?* ‘to be fat’, which is less likely in view of the Akk. parallel.

⁶⁹ Unless ‘white, milk-colored’ is Arab. miry-at- ‘lait qui sort en filet abondant du pis de la femelle’ (BK II 1097-8).

⁷⁰ Cf. also (late) mr.t (if < mVr-, not mVl-) ‘cow’; cf. also (MK) mr, mry ‘Kampftier’ with the sign for bull/cow’.

⁷¹ Less likely < Arab. māriyy-at- ‘antelope blanche’ in view of other Chad. data; however, the similarity is somewhat striking.

⁷⁹ Perhaps also P. Berb. *isa-n (pl.) ‘meat’ which may alternatively originate from AA *sV?- ‘meat’.

⁸¹ ? is < *?, not < *ʃ in W. Rift languages.

⁸² Cf. also miscellaneous terms that are somewhat similar and probably eventually related: Sem.: Akk. (lex.) dūdu (< dawd-, partial reduplication?), (OA, SB) a/etūdu ‘wild sheep (male)’; Off. Aram. 2.5. kʷar- ‘wild ass or camel’¹⁰⁰

⁹⁰ Cf. Zenaga a-žiž (< a-gil*) ‘âne’.

⁹³ Tgr. hawar ‘young (of camel or donkey)’ is likely an Arabic loan. Berb.: Ahaggar awra, pl. iverân ‘chameau dans sa 1ère année’, Ayr. E. Wlm. awâra, pl. iwâran ‘chamelon de quelque mois’ are probably Arabisms.

⁹⁴ Erroneously related to Sem. ṣayr-* ‘donkey’ in SED II No. 50, analyzed as forms with the definite article ḥ-. However, this article occurs only in “words with an initial radical ?...and certain...monosyllables with an initial w or y radical” (Johnstone 1987: 163-4). There seems to be no cases of the ḥ-article replacing initial etymological ḥ- in either Mhr. or Jib.

3. Largest herbivores¹⁰⁷

Amh. kor-əča, Arg. kor-əčča ‘selle’ (DRS 1202), Amh. kärkar ‘louage des bêtes de somme’ (DRS 1276); Chad. (a) kVr-*, kVrkVr- ‘load, carry a load’ (CED #446): W.: Bolewa, Karekare karài ‘load’, Ngizim kákórà ‘load’, kükörú ‘carry a load’, Bade karày ‘goods’, Duwai kàrkòrà ‘load carried on the head’, C.: Bura kari ‘goods, possessions’, Fali-Kiryà kʷär ‘to unload’, E.: Tumak gòr ‘carry; a load’ (g- < k-* is regular), (b) W.: Hausa ta-karkari ‘pack ox’.

¹⁰¹ Cf. kawr- ‘troupeau nombreux (de chameaux, de bœufs)’.

¹⁰³ Cf. Nzangi kərə, Bata-Zumo kara ‘horse’.

¹⁰⁵ Hardly named after its color, since there seems to be no corresponding color name in the available Bura lexicon.

¹⁰⁶ Omot. N. far-* ‘horse’: Wolayta, Zala, Dawro, Gofa, Gamu, Chara far-a < SA?

¹⁰⁷ Some examples from individual languages are quoted after Blažek 1994; however, distribution of the forms among different entries, based on regular consonantal correspondences, is in most cases quite different from this highly valuable collection of data.

¹¹¹ The metathesis is probably due to folk etymology, cf. Chad. C. gar-* ‘bull’: Musgu gari ‘(big) bull’, Muskum gèrré, Vulum gàri ‘bull’ and PAA yVm-* ‘water’. Cf. Blažek 1994: 204.

▲ The resemblance of all these forms can hardly be accidental, though the origin of Eth. *ħ- is far from clear. It could have been explained by *ħ- > Ø- in some of the non-Semitic languages quoted, but *ħ is expected to be preserved as ħ or h in Hadiya, Gollango and Yaaku. It could be suggested that the Eth. term may go back to the compound form *ħayāw ‘alive, living’¹²⁴ + *wariš- paralleling ?arweħoras ‘animal / beast + rhinoceros’ > ?awrāħars > ?awrāris (above). Discussion

Given the above genealogical classification of Afrasian, only those roots whose reflexes are attested in both SEBC and CO branches can be labeled PAA; attestation in Semitic makes this status uncontested. In case of faunistic terms, though, this principle cannot be strictly followed, since the retention of PAA animal names depended on availability of the denotata in the area where the respective language speakers had migrated.

There are two opposing views on the ancestral home of the Afrasians. Alexander Militarev’s Levantine hypothesis is supported by Blažek (2013), and a similar view is held by the archaeologist Peter Bellwood (2013). The idea of an African homeland, originally put forward by Igor Diakonoff (1981; later, however, he would lean more towards the Levantine hypothesis, cf. Diakonoff 1998) is promoted in various works by Christopher Ehret (e.g., Ehret 2011) and Roger Blench (e.g., Blench 2006) and, to a certain degree, shared by George Starostin (Starostin 2017).

The hypothesis according to which Proto-Afrasians may be associated with the highly developed Natufian and Post-Natufian Epipaleolithic culture of hunters and gatherers (12,500–9,500 BCE) is based on several main arguments. First, some of the multiple reconstructed terms¹²⁸ point to incipient agriculture rather than foraging.¹²⁹ For such an early period, both are typical of West Asia, the South Levant in particular, rather than of East or North Africa. Second, the whole picture of PAA culture reconstructed from the PAA lexicon (referring to social and economic differentiation, some terms relating to trade, weaponry, building and dwelling, etc.) features a society highly developed for that period which, again, implies the Levant rather than East or North Africa. Third, there are at least several dozens of hypothetical cultural isoglosses between the non-Semitic Afrasian daughter proto-languages (Berber, Chadic, Cushitic) and, on one hand, Sumerian (Militarev 1995) and, on the other, North Caucasian (Militarev & Starostin 2007), speaking in favor of ethnic and cultural contacts between the corresponding speaking groups which could take place in West Asia in the period between the split of PAA and migration of most of its daughter proto-languages to Africa.¹³⁰

¹²⁸ Ca. 30 in Militarev 2002; the number has more than doubled with a lot of newly processed data, especially Chadic – publication of a new list is forthcoming.

Counter-arguments rely on the repertoire of the PAA zoonyms denoting numerous African wild bovids (including most “antelopes”), elephants, rhinoceroses, hippopotami, crocodiles and odd-toed ungulates (except for onager) and large carnivores (lion, leopard, wolf, jackal, etc.). African animals did not inhabit the Levant during the warmer Preboreal phase of Holocene, which includes the Pre-Pottery Neolithic period (ca. 9,500–8,500 BCE, see Table 1), though the names of these animals are technically reconstructed on the PAA level. Regular consonantal correspondences between the reflexes of these roots point to their PAA origin, though the primary meaning of PAA terms is hard to specify considering the length of time that has passed since the PAA split.

Climate of the Levant in the era of the Natufian culture (ca. 12,500–9,500 BCE) was unacceptable for tropical mammals. The Natufians hunted only the following ungulates: gazelles [Gazella gazella, G. subgutturosa], deer [Cervus elaphus, Damadama], ibex [Capra ibex], aurochs [Bos primigenius], wild boar [Sus scrofa] and onager [Equus hemionus].¹³¹ A corresponding set of wild animal names has been reconstructed for Proto-Semitic (see SED II) whose Urheimat was most likely situated in West Asia, including the Levant, whereas for PAA as many as ca. 50 terms for wild ungulates have been reconstructed, most of them presumably representing various species. Such a variety of ungulate species is typical of the North East African sub-equatorial fauna, which has essentially remained unchanged since the end of Pleistocene.

Many terms denoting tropical African “antelopes”¹³² and largest animals such as elephant, hippopotamus, and rhinoceros, are to be formally considered PAA as well. These PAA roots are usually well reflected in Chadic (less so in Berber and Egyptian), Cushitic, and/or Omotic, but poorly attested in Semitic, whose original habitat being West Asia, the terms for “largest herbivores” sometimes refer to mythical animals (‘monster’, ‘fabulous bull’ and the like), while those for other ungulates usually denote various species of cattle, sheep and goats, asses,¹³³ horses and camels.

Another group of PAA zoonyms relevant for the Urheimat problem is represented by predators. There are 8 reconstructed terms for canines including ‘dog’ (kawit-, kʷihān-, KVʒ/ʒim-), ‘k. of wild canine’ (?away-, ?aw/y-, bawih-, kur(-ay)-, wans-), 4 undifferentiated terms ‘k. of canine or hyena’ (?a/usk-ay-, ba?Vš-, gVd-wahr-), 9 terms for felines including ‘lion’ (labi?-), ‘leopard or lion’ (ba?y-), ‘k. of (wild) feline’ (?ariw-, ba?is-, da(?/y)m-, giwar-, layč-, mary-, sawr-), and one undifferentiated term ‘k. of feline, hyena or viverra’ (?ažur-).¹³⁴ These considerations should rather stimulate searching for the PAA homeland in the East African area, a hypothesis already voiced by several scholars, including Igor M. Diakonoff and others.

¹³⁰ As for Sumerian-Afrasian (non-Semitic) suggested isoglosses, all of them have a PAA origin and, on chronological grounds, can only be loanwords into Sumerian from various intermediate proto-languages of different Afrasian branches. It is possible that another (extinct and unattested) branch of AA in Mesopotamia could function as a substratum under Sumerian; this assumption by Militarev (1995) was accepted as probable by Diakonov (1996).

¹³¹ See Mithen 2003; Lev et al. 2020.

¹³² “Antelopes” comprise a miscellaneous group within bovids, encompassing Old World (mostly African) ruminants that are not bovines, sheep, or goats.

¹³³ In this connection it is worth mentioning that the only species of odd-toed ungulates attested in the Levant is the onager, whereas Africa was home to several species of wild equids.

¹³⁴ The detailed elaboration of these terms is prepared for publication by the same authors as well as reconstruction of other PAA zoonyms including monkeys (4 terms – none in Semitic), other mammals (8 terms, a selection), birds (11, a selection), reptiles (9, a selection), water reptiles and amphibia (4, a selection), fish (5, a selection).

Solid retention of PAA roots denoting representatives of African fauna in Proto-Chadic contrasts with weaker integrity in Egyptian and Proto-Berber and largely relict reflexion in Proto-Semitic. This may be explained by the latitudinal arrangement of the proto-languages descending from PSEBC dialects. The aggregate area of the latter probably stretched from Northeast Africa up to the Levant. The Cushitic and Omotic homelands would be situated in East Africa further to the south than the PSEBC homeland.

А. Ю. Милитарев, С. Л. Николаев. Праафразийские названия копытных в свете проблемы афразийской прародины

В статье представлена первая порция полного тезауруса праафразийских зоонимов, подготовленного авторами: более ста названий копытных, включая полорогих, свиней, эквидов и верблюдов, а также крупных травоядных (слонов, гиппопотамов и носорогов), отражающие максимально полную (на современном уровне наших знаний) картину этих видов фауны в период накануне распада праафразийского языка (11 тыс. до н.э., по глоттохронологии) и в зоне обитания праафразийцев, две различные точки зрения на локализацию которой – Левант и Восточная Африка – также обсуждаются авторами.

Ключевые слова: афразийская прародина; афразийские (афро-азиатские) языки; этимология зоонимов; реконструкция культурной лексики.
